Pitcher Who Threw Ball That Killed Chapman Shows No Sign of Nervousness and Is Strongly Supported by Fans and Team Mates

Just a week after he threw the ball that resulted in the death of Ray Chapman, Carl Mays came back yesterday and shut out the Detroit Tigers by a score of 10 to 0. When the pitcher whose ill fortune it was to be the instrument of the first big league tragedy, started to warm up the crowd gave him a noisy greeting. Again when he first stepped into the pitcher's box the applause broke out again.

Mays pitched without any trace of nervousness and was about as effective as he ever was in his life. Only one of the Tigers reached third base and only in that one inning did it look as Young. 25. Yankees bunched hits behind Mays and piled up ten runs. "Dutch" Leonard was batted out of the box in the

Though he maintained a steely selfcontrol, it was evident that the tragedy of a week ago was constantly in the mind of Mays. Twice when he felt that a curve was about to break close He did not change his style of pitch-

Not a "Bean Ball" Pitcher

Not a "Bean Ball" Pitcher

Before the game started Mays expressed his resentment over the movement reported to have been started by the Boston and Detroit teams to drive him out of baseball. He declared that his reputation as a "bean ball" pitcher was not deserved. Of the Boston and Detroit clubs Mays said: "Both of those teams have pitchers who have hit more players this season than I have. Bush, of Boston, has hit ten men and Ehmke, of the Tigers, has hit about the same number, while I have hit six."

men and Ehmke, of the Tigers, has hit about the same number, while I have hit six."

All through the game the spectators were shouting encouragement to the unlucky pitcher and calling upon him to "shut them out."

The friendly attitude of the crowd would have steadled Mays if he necedod steadying, but he did not. Bracked by a clear conscience, he had closed the book of the tragedy and took up his work again as he should. He did "shut them out."

The talk of a strike against Mays seems to have been exaggerated and propagated by irresponsible personal the principal and took up his work again as he should. He did "shut them out."

Pirates Blow Up

A double boneheaded play gave the Dodgers their run off Hamilton in the third inning and set the fans crazy. Miller fouled to Grimm as a starter for the third. Pfeffer singled to center. Olson doubled past Whitted, sending Pfeffer to third. The Pirates claimed it was a foul and stormed around Umpire Moran, but he refused to change his decision.

Johnston went out, Hamilton to Grimm, the runners holding their bases. Pfeffer was asleep on third and thought the side had been retired, He walked off the bag sward the plate and was half way home before the Pirates realized what he was doing. Then Grimm threw to Catcher Walter Schmidt. Schmidt could have toddled down and tagged out Pfeffer, but it was a day for lunary and Schmidt went crazy. He threw the ball to Whitted. As Schmidt threw the Dodgers woke up Pfeffer by their desparsing wells and

One of the mysteries of sport is a man's ability to play his game one day and buckle up with a crash on the next. And the queer part is that he may play his game when feeling physically and mentally unfit and fail where he never felt better. The matter of complete coordination of brain, muscle and nerve is a study no one has ever mastered. It is this coordination which tells the story, but so far it is still a bit too subtle for the human understanding to reach.

"I don't like to disagree with Vardon," a prominent British player told us, "but I know I am safe in saying that Mitchell is the longest driver in the world. There was one long hole at Deal against the wind. Ray was at least ten yards short with a drive and a full brassie, and no man is easing up in a championship where he wants to get home in 2. On this same hole Mitchell, after a mighty tee shot, got home with his iron. On his tee shot he was at least forty yards beyond the ball that Ray hit. Ray is a great hitter-one of the greatest that golf has ever known. But he isn't as long as Mitchell-and I might add that he isn't as long as players bunched two singles and a home run. Nehf was accorded spectacular support by his mates, particularly on the part of Bancroft and Doyle.

Young Jesse Haines started in the box for the Cards, but he was bumped rather severely and was taken out in favor of a pinch hitter in the sixth. Goodwin relieved Haines, but he also was harshly treated. Jacobs finally finished the game. Frank Frisch came out of his batting slump and led the attack on the Card twirlers with two singles and a home run.

The Giants got off to a one-run lead in the third inning. Earl Smith led with a single over second, and Artie Nehf surprised the populace with another safety to center. Burns forced Nehf at second on a grounder to Layan, Smith taking third. Smith then crossed the plate and Burns reached second on a double steal. Bancroft struck out. Young poked a single to left, but Burns was cut down by McHenry's throw in attempting to score from second.

Frisch gave the McGraw men another tally in the fourth, when he connected with one of Haines's shoots and lifted it into the right field bleachers for a home run. Kelly then grounded out to Stock. Spencer was safe on Lavan's error, and he reached second a moment later, when Haines made a wild heave to first in an attempt to pick him off the bag. Spencer was stranded on second, however, as Doyle flied out to Heathcote and Smith hoisted to McHenry.
